LORD Green, KCMG

Collective memories are often the glue which holds communities and nations together and sometimes they even define a nation. As for individuals, our memories can often point to God's hand in our lives.

Lord Green spent 35 years in the Diplomatic Service. After studying Arabic in the Lebanon he specialised in the Middle East, was Director for the Middle East at the Foreign Office, and served as Ambassador in Syria and Saudi Arabia. He chaired Medical Aid for Palestinians for three years and in 2014 the Prime Minister appointed him as a Cross Bench member of the House of Lords for his public service.

Inscriptions abound in places of worship, chiefly for the purpose of commemorating the dead. But many churches also exhibit initials and dates carved upon the stonework, prompting questions about the messages that might have been intended for posterity.

Within you is a spiritual compass which guides you on your journey through life to that place which is sacred and holy, and known only to you. This is that which holds you, and your sense of who you are.
